Q.3. Read the passage.

The Silk Route was an ancient road that linked China with Europe. Much of the Silk Route was across trade-routes through deserts. There were many oases along the way where caravans stopped; where men and camels rested. Dunhuang was one such oasis town on the edge of the Takla Makan desert. Being the gateway to China, it was a melting-pot for different cultures. As a result, many splendid works of art from different countries can still be seen in Dunhuang.

Besides getting China's silk to Europe, the Route carried new ideas and manufacturing processes like the techniques for making iron and paper and the art of cultivating silkworms across various countries.

But the Silk Route changed with historical events. For instance, during the fighting in Mesopotamia between the Byzantine Empire and Persian rulers, caravans took a more northerly route. The central Silk Route was no longer used and oases along the way lost their business and fame.

Choose the correct answer to complete the statements.

1. The Silk Route is important
   a. for the war between the Byzantines and the Persians.
   b. for trade between the East and the West.
   c. for the exchange of ideas between the East and the West.
2. The most suitable title for the passage would be
